HENDRIX COLLEGE BULLETIN

JUNE 1945

Reservations For Fall Good

Registration for the fall term beginning September 10 is expected to equal or exceed that of last fall, according to the enrollment office.

All rooms for women students have been reserved since mid-May—the earliest date in history. Since that time applications have been placed on a waiting list for possible room releases. Room reservations for men indicate that last year's number will be reached or passed.

Registration of old students will be held September 12 and of new students September 13. New students will have several days of special orientation activities before their registration begins.

Assisting in the enrollment office are Coach Ivan H. Grove, Miss Elizabeth Poole and Miss Marguerite Pearce.

New Organ Bought

A new Hammond electric organ has been added to equipment of the department of music. The organ was ordered for delivery in January but wartime difficulties prevented its arrival till June.

The organ will be a valuable supplement to the pipe organ installed several years ago, according to J. Glenn Metcalf, organ instructor.

Its greatest advantage is its portability, he said. Although it is a full-sized instrument, it can be moved from place to place as easily as a large piano. Music is produced electronically by vacuum tubes and no pipes or reeds are required. Plugging into regular house current completes installation.

Methodist Visitors

Hendrix as usual is host this summer to a number of Methodist groups from both the conferences. First to arrive were more than 200 members of the Youth Fellowship Assembly of the Little Rock Conference, who came for the week following commencement.

The state-wide Methodist Pastors' School, which has been held annually on the campus for many years, opened under greatly restricted conditions June 12 for two weeks. Because of rulings of the office of defense transportation, each conference organized a separate school with enrollment limited to 50.

Three conferences of North Arkansas Conference young people were scheduled for June and July: the Senior Assembly June 25-29, the Youth Assembly July 2-6, and the Christian Adventure Assembly July 9-13. A conference for adult workers was scheduled for June 25-27.

President and Mrs. Reynolds

The man who leaves the presidency of Hendrix College after 31 years has displayed a multitude of fine qualities of which those who know him are now moved to take account: imagination, faith, optimism, tolerance, tenacity.

Outstanding to this writer has been President Reynolds' very unusual combination of realism and idealism. He has dreamed dreams that few about him dared, or cared, to dream; he has had at the same time a sense of the finality of facts as they are. His dreams have warmed his sense of fact and his sense of fact has implemented and restrained his dreams with wisdom. He has in truth been a man with his head in the clouds and both feet square on the ground.

For President Reynolds, and for his witty and charming wife who so quietly and graciously has also done a job of rare quality, all Hendrix will wish many more years of happiness.

George Pike, '45 Speaks

George E. Pike, Class of 1927, now an attorney in DeWitt, delivered an address at Hendrix May 15 in a formal memorial program honoring the late Franklin Delano Roosevelt. Portions of his address follow:

WE are assembled here to honor the memory of a great American citizen, a man who became the thirty-second president of the United States, Franklin D. Roosevelt. He served his country under the most difficult period of its history.

His life was spent, to such a great extent, in efforts of direct service to his fellow man that we feel we are talking of the passing of a neighbor who lived across the street. He kept in such close touch with the American people by radio and travel that we all seemed close to him. We know, however, that his efforts were made with a vision far beyond the good of his neighborhood or state. He intended not only to be of service to the man who lived across the street, but to be of service to men on streets, highways and countrysides all over the world.

Freedom of Speech

Mr. Roosevelt believed that every man or woman had the right to freedom of opinion and the right to express it. Under his theory this was not a privilege reserved to certain groups, classes or races, but was a right to which all men under all governments are entitled. This theory, if effective, would assure democratic government in its purest sense. Free government is the most realistic kind of government, for it not only assumes that a man has something on his mind but concedes his right to say it. He does not have the right to say it without contradiction but he has the right to say it without punishment. Mr. Roosevelt knew that, because of the nature of man, there is nothing more distasteful than the opinion of someone who disagrees with him, and for this reason the principle of free speech must be continuously advocated in a free government.

In order to assure that opinions expressed by Americans might be sound and that the right of free speech be not abused, he advocated literacy for all, the poor, the black, the suppressed. If education is denied, if information is denied, and if the simplest means of earning a living are denied, then the opinions of the people are not good. They are not worth speaking or publishing. It would be better if they were not spoken. He knew this and did all within his power to obtain education for the people of all classes, to make information available to them and to lift them out of poor living conditions and economic slavery.

Freedom of Worship

He advocated the principle of freedom of religion. In his advocacy of this principle he admitted that every individual had the right to worship God according to the dictates of his own conscience. He took no issue with the people who are followers of Mohammed, the Moslems, the Jews, or the followers of Jesus Christ. He had no arguments with the Catholics, the Baptists, the Methodists or other different branches of the Protestant Church. He simply believed that every man in every nation should have the right to worship as he pleased without interference by any government—this government, the government of Germany, Japan or any other. He recognized that for man to achieve his highest ideals and for the world to get the benefit of the best there is in a man that all shackles must be removed from his spirit.

Freedom From Want

In the advocacy of his ideal of making the world free from want, Mr. Roosevelt met his greatest opposition. The result of the application of this ideal is to give to other peoples a part of our material wealth. This immediately arouses the meanest impulses born into the human being. By nature we lay claim to the best for ourselves. Without turning back, however, this prophet who served us for the past 12 years by his words and deeds kept his eyes on this goal and through a constant storm of criticism and abuse furthered this ideal to the end of his life.

He squared his acts with his principles. He was a neighbor to the man on his street, in his town, his state, his country and sought to have the United States to be a neighbor to other nations. His "good neighbor" policy may be as famous, in years to come, as the Monroe Doctrine. His advocacy of the Atlantic Charter and its four freedoms may be as important to the world of the future as the Magna Carta. The influence which he exerted in the conferences at Teheran and Yalta may yield results greater than those of any other political and social leader in history. The influence of his spirit may be greater in the conference at San Francisco than his actual presence.

We do not know what effect time will have on the works of this leader. We cannot accurately predict the future. We are sure however that he commanded the respect of the leaders of all nations, great and small. We know that he drew the love and admiration of the poor and distressed. We know that his influence in the world was used for good against evil. We know that he had a desire to survive his funeral and to live afterward in the good he had done for mankind. We know that he drew the fire of those opposed to change of any kind.

Students of history and the law of mankind know that the dead control in a large measure our destinies. It was of only passing importance to the Kings of Egypt that Moses was adopted by the daughter of Ramses, slew an Egyptian who oppressed a slave, and fled into the desert. But Moses became the deliverer of the Jews and made for them a law, out of which grew the Christian faith. He and the old Roman lawyers, with Alfred of England, the old judges and chancellors, obscured by the shadows of time, are our legislators. We still obey the laws they enacted.

The kind of work done by Mr. Roosevelt is slow in taking effect. The results cannot always be seen immediately. The criticisms, and suspicions of the people are strong, and so strong at the time the work is being done that often such a leader is as much hated as loved. The work is effective only from a long range viewpoint.

A New Era

Present day writers say that with the death of this leader an era is ended. If this is true, then an era is beginning. Let us think what this new era might be. Let us think what we can do as American citizens to make it a great one. Great eras follow great leadership. They must also have the support of industrious, intelligent and progressive people.

The leadership of President Roosevelt has set our feet on a path upward in the relationship between our people and upward in the family of nations. We should accept the responsibility of following that leadership and attempt, in our lifetime, to at least pass

A BIG CHAIR

"Yesterday I was at the home of President Reynolds and I sat in his chair. It was much too big. I have known for a long time that it was too big but I have realized it more and more in these last few weeks.

"We are taking up the new and heavy responsibilities of a new administration. What shall I say? Only this: Let us bind ourselves solemnly together to hold fast to certain aims in these uncertain days, to sail ahead and leave the rest to God."

Owens To Michigan

Mrs. Benjamin Owen, member of the music faculty since 1939, has resigned to join her husband at the University of Michigan, Ann Arbor, where Mr. Owen has been made a member of the university's music faculty.

Mr. Owen has been on leave from Hendrix for several years, first as an instructor in meteorology and code at the Newport flying field and since last fall as a graduate student completing work toward his master of music degree at Ann Arbor. During recent months he has also been assisting on the music faculty and has represented the university in formal faculty recitals.

President J. H. Reynolds expressed profound regret at losing the services of the Owens, but said that he was delighted to see such high recognition given to their abilities. They have attracted much interest while at Hendrix, both as soloists and as an outstanding duo-piano team. Arrangements for their successor have not been completed.

Commencement For 1945 Is Colorful

HENDRIX closed its sixty-first session June 3 with colorful ceremonies featured by conferring of academic degrees upon 18 seniors and honorary degrees upon four educational, church and public leaders including President John Hugh Reynolds, who retired July 1 after a 31-year administration. Six additional students will receive bachelor's degrees at the end of the summer session.

Bishop Paul E. Martin of Little Rock delivered the baccalaureate sermon in the morning and Governor Ben T. Laney spoke at the graduating exercises in the afternoon. Music was furnished by the Hendrix choir, the Hendrix band and Miss Emogene Holland of Wynne, Hendrix student.

The class of 1920, holding their twenty-fifth anniversary reunion, were honor guests at both occasions.

President Reynolds conferred the honorary Doctor of Divinity degree upon Bishop

Martin and the honorary Doctor of Laws degree upon Governor Laney and Alton B. Raney of Little Rock, chairman of the Hendrix board of trustees. Dr. Robert L. Campbell, vice-president and professor of English, conferred the honorary degree of Doctor of Laws upon President Reynolds. It was President Reynolds' third doctorate, he having received the LL.D. from the University of Arkansas in 1913 and from Southern Methodist University in 1935.

Dr. T. S. Staples, dean of Hendrix, presented President Reynolds for the degree with the following citation:

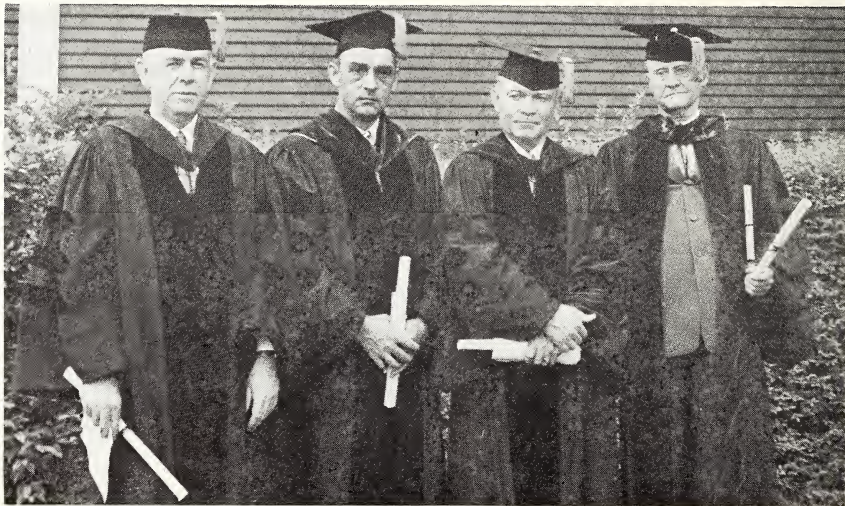

"It is with profound appreciation of his scholarship, of his educational statesmanship, and of his constructive achievements, that the faculty presents Dr. John Hugh Reynolds. We would now recognize his attainments as he has matured the leadership which gives him a peculiar place among educators and churchmen of this nation. In services to church and state he has placed his imperishable imprint on higher education throughout the nation. He has fashioned the policies which have guided this college over half of its history. His scholarship has been productive, his leadership brilliant, his counsel wise. Possessed of the scholar's acquaintance with public affairs, with the philosopher's grasp of human relationships, and with the liberal's insight into things of the spirit, he is equipped with the working implements of a rich and fruitful life."

dience. A large number of the Reynolds family was present for the occasion and sat together at the graduating exercises.

Governor Laney, a former Hendrix student, in his graduating address gave high praise to colleges of the type represented by Hendrix. "From the beginning of our nation to this day," he began, "there have been no educational institutions or educational influences that have helped to mold the thinking of American people more than the denominational college. Former students and graduates of this college have taken their places in affairs—political, social, financial and educational—throughout the state and the nation, serving with credit to themselves and honor to Hendrix College."

To find great achievement in life, Bishop Martin said in his baccalaureate sermon, people must become "sons of God," and when they do become sons of God they will have solved the problems of national and international as well as personal harmony.

In our present struggles to reach a peaceful world order we must avoid the danger of cynicism and pessimism, Bishop Martin said. "As we face the dire alternative of an organized society of nations or else one world war after another—I had rather be fooled by believing too much than by believing too little."
